

To Whom it May Concern:

Thank you for writing the Alaska Public Lands Information Center for information on homesteading or obtaining land in Alaska.

The federal government does not offer any land for homesteading in Alaska.

The State of Alaska, through the Department of Natural Resources, has, in the recent past, offered several programs that convey land to private individuals. These have included the homestead, agricultural homestead, homesite and lottery programs. The State of Alaska Division of land has some parcels available for sale over-the-counter. For more information contact:

Alaska Department of Natural Resources

Some municipalities such as cities, boroughs (the Alaskan "county") and universities conduct land sales or lotteries in which parcels are sold at fair market value. Contact a phone directory for listings in the area being considered.

Another frequently used method of obtaining land is through the private sector. Real estate companies and classified ads are good places to research land availability. Look under land, acreage or recreational properties in the real estate section of the classifieds.

Also Native Corporations may have land for sale. Contact a phone directory for listings in the area being considered.

See the reverse side of this letter for names and addresses of agencies and newspapers that may have land sale information in your area of interest.

Sincerely,

John Morris
Manager
